Who's Got the Bones? Timeline Reveals Park Service Employees Covered Up Theft of Ancient Remains at Effigy Mounds

8/22/16

It's like something out of a Stephen King story. An aging National Park Service superintendent steals the remains of hundreds of ancient medicine men and leaders and sticks them under a workbench in his garage in cardboard boxes. It's 1990 and NAGPRA, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, is about to go into effect. The superintendent suspects the remains will have to be returned to the Native tribes in the area because of NAGPRA. He's not worried about that so much, but he fears also having to return the funerary objects that were buried with them thousands of years ago, objects now on display in the park's museum. He hides the bones in his garage.

According to a timeline prepared by current Effigy Mounds National Monument superintendent Jim Nepstad. The timeline shows how approximately 2,200 human bone fragments were stolen from the park's museum collection and hidden in former superintendent Thomas Munson's garage for over 20 years while park employees and several state agencies half-heartedly searched for them. The timeline reads like testimony from the 1973 Senate Watergate Hearings, with letters, phone conversations and in-person meetings being documented between park administration, the Office of the State Archaeologist, the Midwest Archeological Center and the Midwest Regional Office of the National Park Service. Boiled down to its essential elements, the timeline sounds more like a government version of the Abbott and Costello routine "Who's on first?" "Who's got the bones?" "I don't know. I thought you had 'em." "No, we sent them to you." "Are you sure? Our records say we sent them to you." "Ok, let me check. Nope. We definitely don't have them. Seems like I remember sending them to Lincoln, Nebraska." And so on... for years! But it doesn't stop there. The timeline shows how reports and studies were authorized that investigated the missing bones. At one point a "Curatorial Strike Team" was formed to review park records. The strike team looked over documents provided to them by the park and found nothing that explained where the bones were. It was later revealed that key documents were withheld from the team by unnamed park employees. Then in August 2000, all investigation into the missing bones just seemed to stop. The timeline shows no activity until 2011. In April of that year, Patt Murphy, who at the time was the NAGPRA coordinator of the Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska, requested to see a copy of the park's "NAGPRA inventory," the list of Native items in the park's possession that are required to be entered into the Federal Register. This apparently triggered a lot of anxiety and whispering among park employees.

White House counsel John Dean in 1973, Greener supposedly informed her boss of the seriousness of the park's involvement in the missing bones issue. She presented him with two separate reports from 1998 "both of which contained numerous mentions of missing human remains," according to the timeline. Nepstad began making inquiries. He assigned Park Law Enforcement Officer Bob Palmer to investigate. On April 27, 2011, Palmer visited former Park Superintendent Thomas Munson at his home, asking if he had any information on the missing bones. The timeline states Munson provided no further information and said the remains were sent to the Midwest Archeological Center years before. The timeline doesn't state whether or not Munson's pants immediately burst into flames, but it wouldn't be surprising if they did, considering that the bones were right in Munson's garage. Meanwhile, Greener confided to a co-worker that she was nervous about the missing bones. When asked why, she revealed she had boxed up two sets of human bone fragments in 1990 at Munson's request and helped him carry them out to Munson's car where they placed them in the trunk. What did the co-worker, Administrative Assistant Theresa Wilson, do with this vital piece of information? Nothing. She told no one, saying later she thought Greener had confided her secret to many others and she thought they had reported it. So the investigation continued. Nepstad, ordered an inventory be conducted of the park's entire collection, which was done and, surprise surprise, turned up no bones. With the heat turned up, Palmer again visited Munson at his home and impressed on him the gravity of the issue. Munson buckled, giving Palmer one box of the stolen remains that he said he found. He told Palmer there weren't anymore. Continued...

A new team was formed to investigate the missing bones, this time led by Special Agent Barland-Liles of the National Park Service Midwest Regional Office. On May 16, 2012, Barland-Liles leaned on Greener for information. After a lengthy attempt to extract the truth, Greener admitted to helping Munson take the bones out to his car in 1990. Barland-Liles went to Munson's residence the next day, explaining what Greener told him and demanding permission to search Munson's house. Munson's wife Linda, bless her heart, signed a consent to search and there in Munson's garage, in a beat-up cardboard box sitting on the ground beneath a workbench, was the remaining set of Native bones. Munson eventually received one year of home detention and nearly copy12,000 in fines and restitution for stealing the bones and for the damage caused by his disrespectful storage of them. Greener was fired by the Park Service in June 2013 and was then reinstated a year later after a successful appeal. No one was ever charged for helping cover up the issue of the missing bones. The unsung hero in all this is Murphy, whose initial request to view the park's NAGPRA inventory resulted in a renewed investigation and the eventual discovery of the bones. The spirits of those ancient medicine men and leaders whose bones were once buried in the Effigy Mounds at the park never did possess anyone and make them start killing people. Instead they blessed the mind of Murphy, causing him to find an answer to the question, "Who's got the bones?" Without that blessing, they'd probably still be in Munson's garage.

Quilts of Valor Honors Veterans

Shelly Pruitt, representative of the national organization, Quilts of Valor, was present at the Iowa Tribal August Veterans meeting which is held every month. Her duty that day was to deliver a self-made quilt to two tribal veterans. The Quilts of Valor Organization is made up of volunteers from across the United States to honor veterans that have been touched by war with comforting and healing quilts. Pruitt presented a beautiful quilt and certification to tribal elder & veteran, Jacob BigSoldier Jr., in joyful tears BigSoldier accepted it by surprise! Pruitt had mentioned after that she had another quilt to present to the Chairman of the Iowa Veterans, Eugene BigSoldier, Jr., who was also took by surprise and happily accepted. Thank you so much to the Quilts of Valor Organization for honoring our Tribal Veterans!

Also at the meeting, Tribal Elder, Joyce Bigsoldier-Miller presented sacred Tobacco plants to all veterans!

Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma Vocational Rehabilitation Program

“See the Person Not the Disability”

Juniors

Seniors

History:

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma Vocational Rehabilitation Program has provided vocational services to American Indians since 1994, and transition services to students since 2009. Our goal is to develop and provide specialized services to American Indian students with a disability. We want to help these students that are making a transition from high school to work or who are seeking post-secondary education.

Services Than Can Be Provided:

Depending on an individual's needs and goals, will determine which services are best for you. However, some services that we can provide include testing fees such as SATs & ACTs, assistive devices, evaluations, and various other services.

Qualifications:

Must be an enrolled member of a federally recognized tribe, a junior or senior in high school, and must reside in one of the seven counties served by the Iowa Tribe Vocational Rehabilitation Program. You must also provide documentation of your disability and this can include a doctor's statement or the IEP or 504 plan from your school.

Counties We Serve:

Kay, Noble, Pawnee, Payne, Pottawatomie, Lincoln, and Logan

Cushing to hold 2nd Annual Native American Heritage Festival: Invitation to Iowa People

The second annual Native American Festival in Cushing will be a two day event for 2016. This event is again being organized by the Downtown Cushing Revitalization Association (DCRA) and held in the Downtown Cushing.

The Cushing community and surrounding areas will be honored to have Saginaw Grant as the Grand Marshal for the 2016

Festival. Saginaw is from the Cushing area, still has family here, but he now lives in Southern California. An actor and lecturer and stated to be the most photographed Indian in the film industry. Saginaw, being in many movies, was recently filmed with Johnny Depp in Long Ranger. Saginaw is hereditary Chief of the Sauk & Fox Nation, Iowa/Otoe-Missouria Nations.

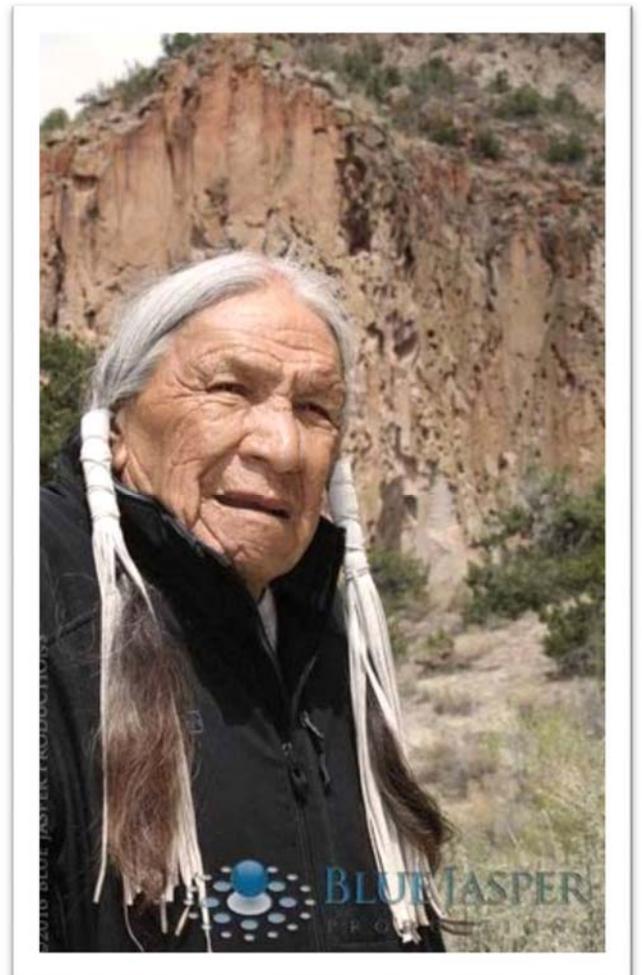

A new addition to this years Festival will be a Native Juried Art Show on Friday, the 9th. This is planned to be held in the Cushing Community Theatre, along with the reception for the public to attend and view the art work with awards for painting, graphics, photography, sculpture, pottery, jewelry and cultural crafts. Contact for registration is Art Show chairperson, Gabby Farnes at 918-306-1547 or DCRA.cushing@gmail.com

Plans are also in the works for an Intertribal Powwow. Helping to organize this powwow is Sac & Fox Councilman Robert Williamson, Pawnee Head Chief Junior Pratt, and Linda BigSoldier, Powwow Chair of the Iowa Tribe.

Otoe-Missouria tribe as been invited to participate in the Festival as well as the Absentee Shawnee and several other tribes. Valerie Branyon, Festival Chair has stated there will also be Arts & Craft Booths as well as food vendors during Saturday's activities.

DCRA will also be selling drinks as well as the newly designed T-Shirt. More activities are being planned with Board members. Marilyn Duff, President of DCRA is asking for more volunteers and hoping the community and surrounding areas will become more involved so we can honor, commemorate and educate all about Native heritage and traditions. This unique Festival reaches out to all of the Cimarron Valley and includes Native and non-native individual of all ages. To help with the Festival please Call 225-2930
